SPECIAL REPORT

Financial services

27 September

Ever since the credit crunch of 2007-08, the EU has been rewriting its rules for supervising the financial markets.

This special report will take stock of the changes, assess the results so far and the prospects for proposals still in the pipeline. It will look at the divisions caused within the EU and at whether Europe is succeeding in putting its own house in order, and it will also consider whether Europe is winning the arguments in international forums such as the G20. Is a repetition of the events of 2007-08 now impossible? Can Europe's banks, insurance companies and pension companies contribute to economic recovery? And what are the characteristics of the emerging European financial sector?
